Dr. Joshua Basseches:

Description: This talk argues that in order to make sense of state-level climate policy outcomes, it is necessary to re-conceptualize the outcomes so that rather than asking only which states have passed these policies, we begin to ask, how are these policies designed? Secondly, we need to ask, who is paying for them?

Joshua Basseches received his PhD in Sociology from Northwestern in 2020 and is currently a Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Michigan's Ford School of Public Policy. His work has been published in Mobilization and Research in Political Sociology, among other outlets. He co-chairs the State Politics Working Group of the international Climate Social Science Network, housed at Brown University.