Description: This presentation compares community-based psychiatric services in public-safety-net versus elite private settings in Los Angeles. It shows how different governance projects—one oriented to the needs of the city, and the other to the needs of privileged families—construct contrasting visions of "client choice," possible futures, and personhood.

Neil Gong is an assistant professor of sociology at UC San Diego and a member of the Michigan Society of Fellows. His research uses diverse empirical cases to investigate power and social control in modernity, with a particular focus on understanding American liberalism and libertarianism.