Lantian Li Presents:
"Rentier Developmentalism: How Contradictory Health Reforms Spoiled the Pharmaceutical Industry in China"

Lantian Li’s research focuses on health regulation and policy. She studies the political and institutional origins of health regulations and analyzes their socio-economic impacts in global and comparative contexts. Her work has been published in World Development, Qualitative Research, Asian Journal of Law and Society, Frontiers in Sociology, and Journal of Chinese Governance. She received the 2020 Reinhard Bendix Student Paper Award Honorable Mention from the ASA Comparative and Historical Sociology Section and served as the Student Representative on the ASA Sociology of Development Section Council from 2020 to 2021. Her work has been generously funded by the Association for Asian Studies, the Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation, the China Times Cultural Foundation, and the Buffett Institute for Global Affairs.